At a scary Halloween night, when the sky was black and the rain poured down, an explorer named Rebeca decided to wander around a spooky and abandoned house alone. She put on cloak with a torch in her hand, and so, the adventure began.

Rebecca shuddered at the view of the house, as she'd heard of a rumour about the spooky house: it is haunted and almost everyone who went in was no longer alive, even if some survived, they were never the same. However, she still insisted to climb up the hill and get into the house.

After a hard fall slipping on the mud, Rebecca finally climbed up to the top of the hill. She hesitated for a moment, then took a deep breath, and walked into the house. Once she stepped into the house, the wooden floor creaked, and mysterious liquid dripped from the ceiling, she wondered if it was just some red paint, but no, it's blood! The wind blew loudly like evil laughter as Rebecca held back a scream, but she was still determined to find out about this mysterious haunted house. Spooked out, she kept on going.

In the dark, Rebecca found a small room with only a book in there, she felt confused and thought, 'Why would there be a book that looks quite new?' So, she decided to take a look. There was a vampire altar on the book cover, which must mean something, and on the first page, were some strange sentences made out of words. Rebecca gave a stiff laugh, she wanted to say these words out loud, so she could remember them, so she said three lines out loud, she had made a terrible mistake.

The wolves howled into the night skies, as if they were calling their leader, crimson red lightning struck the book as three columns of shadows rose out of the book. Turns out the book contained a lot of curses and evil spirits. Rebecca stared in horror as the shadows mixed together until a fearsome wolf monster stood in front of her. It's fur glistening against its blood red wings, claws and teeth which dripped deadly black poison, and as it bared sharp bloody fangs, its pupils shrank to blood red slits. It turned towards Rebecca, who's frozen in time, it stared at her with red angry eyes. Then, it did something unexpected, it smiled and said in an ancient voice, 'Ah, humans are always so curious, and it always lead them to the end, now, it is your turn!' When Rebecca realised what the wolf was talking about, it's too late. 'Chomp!' now Rebecca was no more than a small ghost that's trapped in the house, but at least she had companion that could be with her for eternity.
